Top Tips

To enable some young children to access this type of activity and build their tolerance to it, as well as increasing their ability to persist at an activity for a longer period of time, it may be helpful to use a sand-timer to timeframe the activity.

Many young children with an ASD do not have a concept of 'finished'. It is, therefore, important to teach this concept.

In some instances and in the early stages of development, some young children may require physical prompting to access this type of activity. It is important to explain this to parents or carers before this is done.
